The build up of pressurized pus in the middle ear causes an earache, swelling, and redness. Since the eardrum cannot vibrate properly, the individual may experience hearing problems.

Swimmers Ear

Swimmer's ear or, otitis externa, is typically a bacterial infection of the ear canal which differs from otitis media which involves fluid behind the eardrum. Otitis externa is most commonly caused by water getting trapped in the ear canal. It also follows injury to the skin of the ear canal caused by aggressive "cleaning" with Q-tips, bobby pins, match sticks and other devices.
